Administrative/Biographical History

In 1968, Eleanor Wolfe was a student in Thomas E. McNamara’s seminar on Robert Frost which was being held at Plymouth State College. She remarked that a friend had some Frost materials and arranged for McNamara to meet Amy Townsend. Subsequently, Mrs. Townsend and her sister, Eleanor Gallishaw, decided to give Plymouth State College the books, letters, manuscripts, and other Frostiana collected by their father, George H. Browne. This material is the core of the George H. Browne Robert Frost Collection.

George Browne and Robert Frost met in 1915 when Frost delivered the Phi Beta Kappa lecture at Tufts College. Impressed with what he heard, Browne struck a deal with Frost. In exchange for speaking without fee to the boys at the Browne and Nichols School, a private day school co-founded by Browne in Cambridge, Massachusetts, Brown promised to arrange several lecture engagements for Frost for which Frost would be paid. He did so, and material in the collection documents this.

Browne also felt Frost needed greater critical exposure in the United States. As a result, his “Robert Frost, a poet of Speech” appeared in the Independent on May 22, 1916.

The Browne and Frost families were close friends from 1915 to 1920 with the Frosts visiting often at the Webster farm in Bridgewater, N.H., which was the family home of Browne’s wife. Browne instructed Lesley Frost in tennis and figure skating, as well as spending many late nights with Frost discussing poems and word use. Both men were well educated intellectuals who believed they were “right”. This led to an inevitable quarrel over the use of the word interval or intervale (Frost’s letter arguing his case is part of the George collection). Although the friendship continued, it was never as close after this difference.
Subsequent to the initial gift from George Browne’s daughters, several other contributions have been made to the collection. Kathleen Morrison has been most generous as has Lesley Frost Ballantine. Elizabeth Doolittle and The Jones Library donated extensive clipping files. Several persons who used the collection extensively presented copies of their dissertations, articles or books. Other persons have come forward with a variety of additions: John Pillsbury arranged for the First Day of Issue Stamps, Elsie Gould donated the set of sterling silver medals; also, the California Friends of Robert Frost have donated several items.
